

To Whom May Concern,

Higher than average electric bills have been negatively affecting this state for many years. Many businesses generate large electric bills. Why should such a business move to Connecticut or remain in state when they can cut their electric bills by 30-50% by locating in another state? The citizens of this state should not have to pay exorbitantly high electric bills so that utilities can rake in 9% profits. But human nature is to make as much profit as possible and so the utility MONOPOLY needs to have a FIXED rate of income. And that level of income should put us under the national average. And there need to be severe penalties for days where service is not provided. And these penalties need to be rebated to customers.

Sincerely,
Roger Fish
Eastford, CT