Died May 11, 1924, in Peking, China.

Father, Li Fung Liang, a business man; son of Wen Sen Liang and Liang Lee Sze; descendant of Yui Ping Liang, who went to Canton from Chu Gee Lee in 1279. Mother, Liang Cheng Sze, daughter of a merchant of Shiang San, Canton.

Was one of the first contingent of one hundred and twenty Chinese young men sent to study in America in 1872; was assigned to the care of David E. Bartlett (B.A. 1828), of Hartford, Conn. Preparatory training received at West Middle Grammar School there and at Hartford Public High School (graduated in 1878). At Yale was pitcher on Freshman Baseball Team and member Delta Kappa Epsilon; recalled by Chinese Government in middle of his Junior year, but in 1907 received his B.A. with enrollment in the Class of 1882.

Taught at Government School of Telegraphy at Tientsin 1881-83; returned to Canton in August, 1883; in December entered the service of H. E. Chang Chih-tung, Viceroy of Liangkwan, at Canton; three years later went to Wuchang with him as secretary and advisor; during the Boxer uprising in 1900, it was due to his ability in maintaining a clear understanding with the foreign consular bodies and his policy of good will to all nations that the Viceroy was enabled to maintain the peace of the Yangtze Provinces; promoted to the customs taotai of Hankow in April, 1904; five months later was transferred to the same position at Tientsin; as president of Pei Yang University, Tientsin, arranged for the sending annually of students selected from that university to study in the United States; in 1906 deputed as chief commissioner to inquire into the cause of the Nan-chang massacre in Kiangsi; averted the danger of a serious breach between China and France and brought the affair to a peaceful conclusion; held post of comptroller-general of the Imperial Maritime Customs in April, 1907; in September appointed minister to United States, but before he was ready to assume his post in Washington was made vice-president of the Board of Foreign Affairs at Peking; in October, 1908, delegated to Amoy as one of the commission to welcome the visiting American fleet; upon his return in December was appointed acting president of the Board of Foreign Affairs; made president of the board in March, 1909, and in conjunction with that post also served as imperial counselor; while president succeeded in negotiating with the United States Government, through the American Minister at Peking, for the return to China of the United States' share of the Boxer indemnity, to be set aside for the sole purpose of sending Chinese students to study in America; then apportioned a part of the fund for the founding of Tsing Hua College and appointed Tong Kai-son as president of the college; in July, 1910, was obliged to resign his office on account of ill health, but by an imperial edict in August, 1910, was appointed special ambassador to Europe and America, with full powers to negotiate with the foreign nations for an arbitration treaty and the revision of China's customs tariff and to promote the good will of all nations; arrived in America in November, 1910, and held successful conferences on his mission with the United States, England, and Germany; LL.D. Yale 1911; in reorganized cabinet of 1911, headed by Prince Ching, was reappointed by imperial edict to the presidency of the Board of Foreign Affairs, with the additional honor of being imperial advisor of the first Imperial Privy Council; left for China in July, 1911, but returned to Germany when he received news of the Wuchang uprising; the abdication of the Emperor in January, 1912, prevented his return to China; retired to his new home in Wannsee, Germany, for the recuperation of his health; returned to China in May, 1914; was given the portfolio of minister of communications and accepted the post, with the hope that there might be some way of convincing Yuan Shih-kai of the advisability of returning the empire to the Emperor under a constitutional monarchy, with the president as prime minister; resigned from office when Yuan Shih-kai proclaimed himself emperor in October, 1916; assisted General Chang Hsun in his restoration movement of 1917; when the coup failed was obliged to seek safety in the Dutch Legation; was pardoned a few months later and returned to his home, where he had since lived in retirement.
