I have been pulled over 3 times in 32 years on the road. I was in the wrong all 3 times. Before the officer approached my vehicle - the radio went off, the sunglasses came off, I took out my license and registration and put both hands on the wheel. When I spoke with the officers I addressed them as "sir". In other words, I exercised common sense. This bill seems to place the burden of "innocence" entirely on the police officers. What about education about how to act when you are stopped? Of course excess force and bias should never be tolerated. However, there seems to be a lot of verbiage that demonizes the officers. It is already a dangerous and thankless job. As a citizen who treasures law and order, I believe this bill needs serious revision.

Sincerely,
Michele Burke
